MTS PD Day

8:30am-3:00pm

Are you ready to revolutionize your teaching and dramatically improve the engagement and comprehension of all of your students? Many students decode and yet don't comprehend what they read. The Fabulous Four, or reciprocal teaching strategies (Palincsar and Brown, 1984) predict, question, clarify, and summarize work as a powerful package to produce dramatic results in reading comprehension.

RT consistently yields student growth of six months to two years often in just three months (Hattie, 2008). This classroom tested version of reciprocal teaching works well with any text- fiction or nonfiction- during whole class lessons, read alouds, content area reading, close reading, small group guided reading, literature circles, and intervention groups.

Help students overcome the challenges they face comprehending informational text. Learn exciting ways to teach informational text structures and features that really work! Come to this practical, hands-on, and entertaining workshop to learn dozens of proven ideas you can use tomorrow to strengthen student comprehension using any reading material.

Participants will learn to:

- Incorporate reciprocal teaching into any literacy program plan, materials, or grade level
- Teach each of the four comprehension strategies in the reciprocal teaching protocol—predict, question, clarify, summarize
- Use reciprocal teaching with any reading material including fiction, nonfiction, poetry, chapter books, picture books, content area reading, articles
- Create quick classroom charts and foldables for student engagement
- Engage students with Fab Four poetry lessons plus bonus fluency ideas
- Teach intervention ideas for struggling readers
- Create engaging small group lesson plans for guided reading with fiction or informational texts
- Help students understand and engage with informational text using 20 mini-lesson options
- Involve students in rich discussions using literature circles or book clubs
- Measure growth of comprehension using the Fab Four

The Reading Council of Greater Winnipeg will present a full day session with Lori Oczkus, targeted at teachers, literacy specialists, or other school personnel interested in building life long readers. More information will follow.
